edy, but the entraptured audience would not have it.

These experienced first-nighters knew that the shy producer standing out there before the footlights in an auster to the imperative applause had stamped his individuality—his genius for meiling the public heart and making the public hund—upon the new show introducing Geo.

M. Cohan's comedians. Otto Harbach and Frank Mandel wrote the beok and lyrics and Lou Hirsch the musical strong a trio of collaborators as fee will find in the musical comedy phace, and Julian Mitchell and Sam Farrest staged the piece, in expert fashion.

This is the dynamic Oce. M's first musical production of his ewn since the dissolution of the famous partnership of Cohan and Harris. He evidently set out to eclipse all his previous achievements. At any rate, this is what he has done. "Mary" is not alone a grand old name: it's a grand musical comedy, good sussic and a darkiling array of ilancers. Edna Pendleton, Bert Gardner, Nick Judeis, Edna Pierre, Lew Logiett, Edle Mae, Jeseph Allen, Anne Pauley, Eddle Griard, Jeseph Cins and Chas, O'Brien play the principal parts, and they have worthy associates in the dances and the members of the chorus. The place is handsomely staged and continued.

may be crooks. Your chauffeur is possibly a financially embarrassed pobleman. George Barr McCutcheon, the writer, called New York "The City of Mask" and wrote an entertaining novel about it by that name. The book has been transformed into an aborbing photophry, with Rebert Warwick as the riar, and will be on view at the Davis theories Wednesday and Thursday.

"The City of Masks" is about an attractive group of impoverished European nobles who are concealing their identities in humble occupations in New Terk. Mr. Warwick is one of them, and the romance which springs up between him and another of the coterie, who is peding as a governess in a rich man's house forms the theme of the story. Thomas Heffron directed the pleture, which is a Paramount Arteraft, and Lois Wilson is the leading woman.
